#WIKIEDU20

The very first Wikipedia editathon hosted at the University of Edinburgh was Women in Science and Scottish History in February 2015 and was focused on the Edinburgh Seven, the first group of matriculated undergraduate female students at any British university.

As a research-based institution, Professor Allison Littlejohn from the Open University was invited to come along to the event to help us make sure there was value in a collaboration with Wikimedia UK and to analyse what was going on in these editing events and what their impact actually was. And what she discovered was that there was indeed genuine formal and informal learning going on at these events and she's produced two research papers arising from that 1 event.

1. Does a formal wiki event contribute to the formation of a network of practice? A social capital perspective on the potential for informal learning. This paper looked at the formation of networks of practice and social capital through participation in an editathon. Through Allison's work we learned that activity did not stop after the editathon event and participants did see it as an important part of their professional development.
2. Becoming an online editor: perceived roles and responsibilities of Wikipedia editors. The second paper looked at the process of becoming a Wikipedia editor – and how participants felt editing was a form of knowledge activism and helped generate important discussions about how knowledge is created, curated and contested online and how Wikipedia editors can positively impact on the knowledge available to people all around the world and addressing those knowledge gaps.

Changing the way stories are told.

Research Report

Example quotes from focus groups

“ What is cool about it for me that changed the way I thought about it was, we were talking about the public aspect of it, that people can change what you're doing. But that's a really interesting way to look at it because usually when you do research and you write a paper, if it's not going to be published, which most of the time for just a class, it's not going to be, you do all this work, you submit it and then it just disappears. With this project, the idea is you put your work out there, you put the information out there and then other people can add to it and it's like existing in a conversation.

“ It makes you want to work harder, I guess. For me, at least, because it's going to have an impact. For an essay, it's just for the grade and then you're going to throw it away. So, there's not that much motivation. I mean, it is. It's fun to write papers and put your opinion and stuff, but with this article, it's like you're actually making a change.

“ You get one grade in the end for the entire class, so you can't really just do this for a grade. You kind of need to find your own motivation in it, which I agree. It's fun to just write something that's important. It's something that other people will read, it's not just you and the professor.

“ I found it like less daunting, like when the professor assigns me a ten page research paper or something. I have trouble getting myself to do it sometimes just because I'm like, "Why?" But this, I was like I'm contributing to something bigger and it's public. So, I felt more motivation to go in and edit it and whatever.
